California Justice

By David Kulczyk

Word Dancer Press, $15.95, 180 pages

Shoot outs, lynchings, and massacres were not just things that happened in the frontier towns in the Mid- and Southwest. California was a frontier for many years, and the California Gold Rush brought thousands of men, many rough and hardened, into the state. Kulczyk has collected thirty-five stories of justice, California-style, starting with the Sacramento Squatters Massacre in 1850 and ending with a Eagle Scout helping an injured police officer shoot and kill an ex-con trying to free his girlfriend in 2003. California has been the home of more than a few headline-generating killings, many of which are covered in California Justice - Bugsy Siegel, Sirhan Sirhan, Harvey Milk, and George Moscone. An interesting collection of stories, and a nice addition for any California history buff's library.
