Sir Reginald's Logbook

By Matt Hammill

Kids Can Press, $17.95, 34 pages

Sir Reginald is not your typical explorer. He is on the search for the Lost Tablet of Illusion, which reminded me a lot of a story line right out of Indiana Jones. He keeps this logbook detailing his journey to find the Tablet complete with time and all the terrifying creatures he meets along the way. Once he reaches the Tablet, he realizes it has been stolen, so he begins following the footprints in hopes of ascertaining the legendary Lost Tablet of Illusion.

Well, as it turns out, Sir Reginald's adventure is really taking place in his own house. He has a wonderful imagination! I don't want to give the rest away, which means I suggest you head on out to your local bookstore to pick this one up for the child in your life.

Matt Hammill is still in touch with his inner kid and that brought me back to the days where imagination was the best toy around. With rainy days still ahead this winter it will spark the creativity in your child to find their own Tablet of Illusion. This is a great book for the beginning reader, boys and girls, and as a bed time story.
